Stephen Mezias, Professor of entrepreneurship and family enterprise at INSEAD Business School, said: "INSEAD is proud to partner with the Jeddah Economic Forum 2016 to explore opportunities and challenges for public private partnerships (PPP) in the Kingdom and highlight the potential for positive impact of such collaboration on the economy".

According to Mezias, the interaction of the private and public sectors is vital for the successful development of new and emerging industries and economic transformation. "By focusing on PPP with a view to privatization in the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, it is important to evaluate the processes by which the government and the private sector work together to diversify and evolve the economy", Mezias adds.

Jeddah Economic Forum 2016 will bring together different stakeholders, senior officials, decision makers and experts from different industries showcasing the commitment to a transparent transition into PPPs through effective public-private dialogue and open communication. JEF's discussion panels will also be addressing the economic and policy outlook in the Kingdom. The forum will also set the stage for focused sessions on privatization opportunities in education, healthcare, utilities, transportation, infrastructure and municipal functions.
